Gratitude Mandalas

One of my favorite practices is to combine my love for words and journal writing with mandalas. Each year during the holidays, I pull out a Flower of Life mandala and fill the shapes with words of appreciation. This year I designed a new mandala that starts with the Flower of Life in the center and surrounded it with a border of interlocking semi-circles.

In the center petals, I wrote down the names of the many people who I'm connected to including family, friends, colleagues, and members of my mandala community. You may include names of your mentors, teachers, authors, and artists who inspire you.

 $(\mathcal{A}, \mathcal{A}, \mathcal{A$

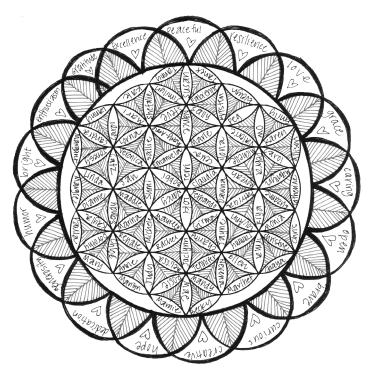

Along the outer edge, record words to describe the qualities that you admire and appreciate.

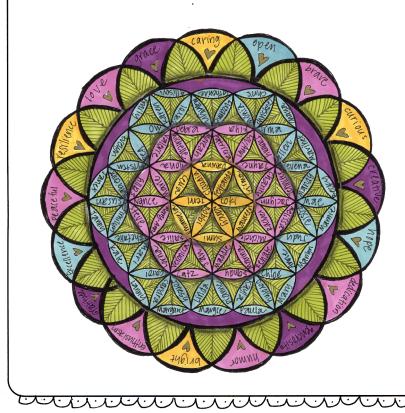

As you fill in the mandala, consider the many ways that you are connected.

Fill some of the shapes with doodles and little drawings. Here I tucked in hearts under each virtue.

A leaf-like pattern was repeated throughout to add detail.

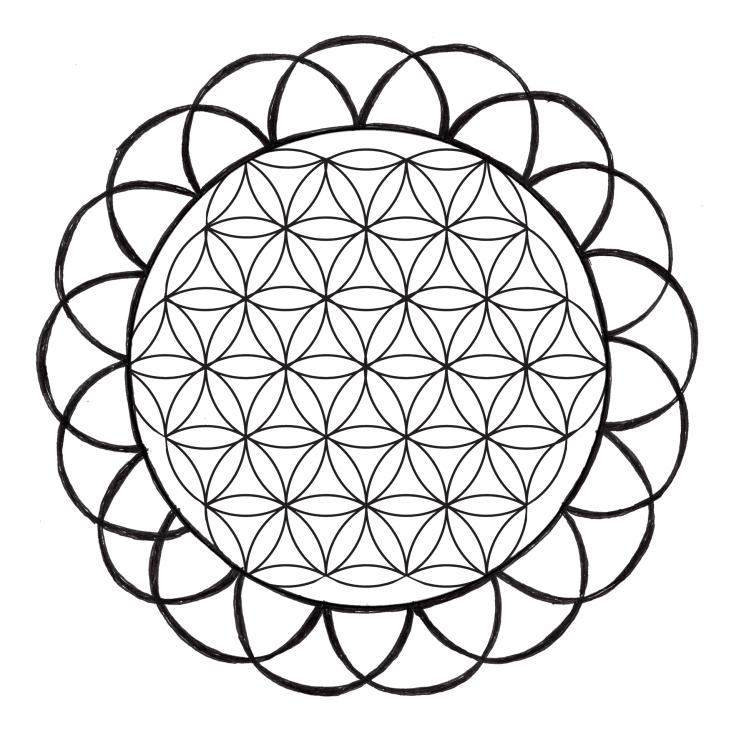

Try This: Print a copy and bring it to your holiday celebration. Invite guests to add their words of appreciation. Together you can create a group gratitude mandala.

Pull out your favorite coloring supplies and think about each person as you fill in the shapes with color.

May your heart be filled with joy as you color this gratitude mandala.

Brightest Blessings, Kathryn Costa

Imagine beginning the new year with a weekend focused entirely on you, creating mandala art, reflecting on where you're at in life, connecting with your body through gentle movement and nourishing food – and all of this set in a gorgeous natural setting.

Join Kathryn Costa on New Year's Eve weekend at Kripalu Center for Yoga & Health in the breathtaking Berkshire mountains in Massachusetts. Mandala is a Sanskrit word that loosely translates to mean "circle" or "center." Creating mandala art is a powerful practice that fosters self expression, balance, and well-being.
